What has been done:
- The website can display a list of quizzes
    - Including Title, Description, and Number of Questions
- Each quiz has an edit Option
    - You can edit the title and description, or delete the quiz with the edit button
        - You can save the changes made or cancel editing the changes
- You can add a new quiz
    - When you select "Add a quiz" you will be prompted to add a new quiz, then you will have to choose the edit button to edit the fields
- You can select a Quiz to display the questions
- The list of questions is displayed once a Quiz is picked
    - Each question displays its name, body, number of points
- Each question has an answer box (Textarea if the short answer, drop down if multiple choice)
    - After answering the question, you will be told if you were correct/incorrect
- You can publish/unpublish each question
    - You can then choose to only see the published questions/all questions
- Each question has an edit option
    - You can edit any field of the question or delete the question with this button
        - You can save the changes made or cancel editing the changes
- You can add a new question: similar to the quiz, you will just enter a title and then go back and edit it's fields

Things I would change:
- The style, it's just hideous
- I would change the multiple-choice answer option to a different style I think
    - The current problem is that if the answer is the first element in the options list, you have to pick the wrong answer first, and then pick the first element again to be told if you were correct

Things I'm still working on until this is graded:
- Adding the total points
- Adding test cases
- Clearing the answers
- Ability to reorder quiz questions